Know your thoughts

An outline always gives you a clue of what is important and what can add extra details to your essay. Planning out your points and thoughts to add to the essay itself is a huge success and to write my essay, I have done the same. I figured out my thoughts, gave them a proper shape and then moved towards the first step of the outline.

Share how points relate to you

A narrative essay is all about telling your story or talking about the things that relate to you. So, you have to explain in the first part of the outline how the target points relate to you or what is your take on it. For this purpose, you can always add a hook, some rhetorical questions, and the attention grabber quote. But, do not forget to make yourself very clear at the start of the outline.

Catchy Introduction

After the hook, your main introduction starts here. Always remember, your outline works as a proposal for your essay, so do not take it for granted. You have to make it stand out among all the outlines and for this, you have to write a catchy starting paragraph. If possible, add the imagery and some dramatic lines which creates suspense for the readers and they feel compelled to read the whole outline. However, do not be over-excited and go out of the way which does not connect with your main essay.

Set Up the story

In the first body paragraph, set up the ground for your story of how it started and how it moves on. Keep your pace low and do not pace up because you are setting the main ground for the whole story here. Use descriptive language and if possible be concise too.

Climax

What happened to movies which do not have a climax or any turning point? Of course, you lose your interest and leave them in the middle of the story. The same can happen to your outline to folks if you will not add any climax. So, take a twist in the middle of the story and add something which is the heart of the main story. Maybe you can tell how some event is starting to impact you. The choice is yours here totally.

Move towards Resolution

In the last body paragraph, you will move towards the closing point which will mark the end of your story. On the other hand, there are some essay writer free services for students who can easily put their thoughts on paper. Now here, do not end abruptly but tell what was the outcome of the whole story. If it affected you or not. Or maybe it made some difference in your life.

Conclusion

Here, you can add the summary of the whole essay and make the ending statement. Do tell how it relates to the readers and what difference your story can make as a whole. At this point, if you want, you can send your outline to some online essay writing service and ask them to make changes for you. They can make your conclusion and another essay more effective. You will always have the option to contact them. Here is a simple guide that can help you out in making a good outline but you only have to know what things are important for it. Once you know and add all the details, your outline is all ready for submission. Best of luck with your writing journey then.
