The sale of genetically modified organisms (GMOs) is regulated by the Cartagena Protocol on Biodiversity and the Nagoya Protocol on Access and Benefit Sharing. The commercialization of GMOs and in particular that of genetically modified (GM) crops and foods has led to ethical, political and socio-economic debates worldwide. While the debate on the environmental, health and economic aspects of GMOs remains in full swing, it is also accompanied by a growing social awareness of biotechnology. This is exemplified by the emergence of biotechnology-related non-governmental organizations (NGOs) and grassroots movements. In this environment, international, national and regional organizations, and their members, such as the World Trade Organization (WTO), the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) and the Convention on Biological Diversity (CBD) are promoting transnational access and benefit sharing of genetic resources, and co-existence of conventional and GM crops in order to ensure that GMO technology is developed in a sustainable way. Bewakoofiyaan Hindi movie 300mb Separately, regional initiatives and regional platforms are also promoting the development of sustainable biotechnology-related practices, and of supporting the development and implementation of a system for sharing and exploiting the benefits arising from biotechnology. The conflict between developing and developed countries over access to and benefits of biotechnology was the main topic at the "Global Conference on Agricultural Research and Innovation for Sustainable Development", organised by the CBD and held in Bangkok, Thailand in 2011. The United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD), together with other United Nations Agencies, organisations and CGIAR research centres and institutions is committed to promoting sustainable development and aims to achieve this through the production and application of knowledge. Global Conference on Agricultural Research and Innovation for Sustainable Development Organised by the Convention on Biological Diversity (CBD) in Bangkok, Thailand in 2011, the conference marked a turning point in the discussions on biotechnology and its applications in agriculture, which is the most important sector of the agricultural sector in terms of employment and production. More than 400 experts from over 150 countries attended the conference to participate in the debates on the key issues, including: access and benefit sharing; impact assessment; new issues and developments in sustainable biotechnology; and the promotion of collaborative research and technology development. The proceedings of the conference, as well as the related documents, will be published in 2012. United Nations Conference on
