A: To begin, let's start with the simple answer: The blue icon is for your browser to pick up an file. That file is downloaded and stored in a temporary location on your computer. It is not saved until the download is complete, and the blue bar disappears. So, the blue bar means, "this file is ready to be saved". It will disappear when you exit the browser and it saves it to your computer. So, why did the blue bar appear on the images? There are a few possibilities. The file was very large, and the computer was not able to save it to it's memory and just made it sit there until it could save it to a disk or more memory. It gives you an indication that you have to wait for the file to complete to save. This is an indication to the user that the file is large. It's really hard to show a progress bar if you can't see all of the content of the file at once. Since the file is large, the user is given a short indicator that the file is large and will take some time to download and save. The software developers thought it was going to save a large file, and said, "you know what, this bar is not going to be very useful to the user, so let's just give them the data they have to save to disk". In the case of the demo, it's a software demonstration, so it saves it to a file, the file is just made visible to you in the browser. All that said, the blue bar is not a guarantee that the file has finished downloading. It's a tiny indication that the file is "done" and ready to save to your computer.

2015: All-SEC
Honorable Mention First Team Kudos to the team. A lot of work has gone into UGA football. I am still amazed at how good the team is. No one from our 2018 team can be here, but let's see how you guys look in 2018. Good Luck!
