Burritt “You’re only as strong as your weakest link,” is the conventional wisdom when it comes to advice. Vivint Solar has proven time and time again that it gets that advice. And now CEO Paul Ramsey is taking the industry by surprise with the announcement of the next-generation Vivint Solar P-Series Tracker. I’m sure that Ramsey didn’t really expect the CEO of Vivint Solar to become a topic of discussion on the Fin-Sentiment website, but there he was after the NAB Show last week, participating in a conference panel in which he was the only solar industry executive on stage. The first question was about the new Vivint Solar P-Series Tracker. Ramsey’s direct, breezy manner, his self-deprecating humor and his enduring confidence made him an engaging guest. But what was even more memorable was that he took the mic and just talked. He talked about the history of Vivint Solar; the need for diversity in the solar industry; the strengths and weaknesses of Vivint Solar compared to competitors; and what he was proud of in the last three years. At the end of the panel, he was asked, “Who are you taking money from?” The question was a reference to the fact that Vivint Solar was the only solar company on the panel stage. His answer was, “The banks that finance us, the customers who pay us, the producers, the installers, the managers, the technicians and the sales associates.” RAMSEY: “We’ve been able to lower pricing by a third on our commercial systems. They’re consistently 3-5 times cheaper than other tracking products. We don
