The Indian Express described the film as "an absorbing tale" with "exceptional performances" and "a luminous cinematography". Plot The story is set in 1931 and takes place during World War II, which leads to a war between India and Germany. After the demise of his parents, Anand Mohan (Vrajesh Hirjee) is sent to his uncle's home. There, he meets and falls in love with Janki (Savita Prabhune), who is engaged to marry her childhood sweetheart, Jai Singh (Sonu Sood). Anand is recruited as a driver and messenger for the British India Secret Police (briefly seen as the Rashtriya Swayamsevak Sangh) and its Indian wing, the Ghadar Party. Meanwhile, Janki and Jai Singh are detained by the British India secret police for their political views. Anand is sent to the police station to save them and is told that the police is not interested in their case. On the contrary, they were sent to a jail called "Shaheed Bhawan", where they find the graves of those who have been hanged as revolutionaries. Anand discovers that they were members of the Ghadar Party. Anand becomes a close friend to Bhagat Singh, the young revolutionary leader (Shahid Kapoor), who is given a party by Anand for the rally on March 23. When Anand reveals that he is a freedom fighter, Bhagat Singh invites him to the party. After a good time of partying, Anand falls asleep, only to discover that he is missing the next morning, and that he has been arrested. In the prison, he meets Janki and Jai Singh. He promises to release them from the prison if they can prove his innocence. Janki finds the
