2021.11.22 02:42 .After over two years of popularity, Automattic is winding down the automatic comment reply feature on

WordPress.com sites. On July 11, the company announced in a statement that “today, we will be

turning off the option to enable automatic comment replies.” The feature was shut down across the entire WordPress.com network in July of last year, but individual sites could choose to keep it enabled until then. This option made it possible for any reader to automatically reply to commenters.

This often led to replies appearing without comment authors' knowledge, which was not ideal. (Posts may have also been edited with the reply option enabled, causing a subsequent version to show a different reply.) Here's how it worked. Automattic began rolling out automatic reply in 2015, and by last September it was enabled on about 80 percent of the sites in the network. The company worked on this feature since around 2011. At the time, it was meant to help with spam and other problems that caused people to flag comments. The feature was also relatively new, and limited in scope.

When the company announced that it was rolling out the feature, it specifically mentioned “low-effort, spam-prone sites.” In May of 2016, the feature began to be enabled on all sites as well. In 2018, the feature appeared to be getting traction, with 50 percent of sites on the network already using it.

However, the rate of adoption plateaued at around 40 percent and stayed there for the rest of the year. When sites enabled the feature, the auto-reply button appeared in the Edit Post or Comments screen. So, what is going to happen to sites that enabled the feature? Automattic will keep the option for individual sites to enable the feature, which will last until July 11, 2019. The company also plans to continue to add to the WordPress.com support team to handle support for websites running WordPress.com. If you're using the feature, you can disable it or use the new Comment Settings to use Disqus or Facebook

---
