where possible. The knowledge has been broken down into four categories based on the chronological order of their appearance. Vedic times (Āgamas) The Āgamas or Vedic times – the Vedic Period (beginning c. 1500 BCE), as identified by Vedic scholars like R.C.Zaehner, are the Vedic texts. These were the traditional, orthodox texts and are primarily mentioned in the Vedas. The Āgamas mention the names of the various deities, their characteristics and qualities, as well as rituals, customs and rules of conduct. The Āgamas were composed over several thousand years, probably first in Vedic Sanskrit. In some ancient Indian manuscripts, they are also referred to as the Taittiriya, as they were considered to be associated with the deity Skanda (also known as Śiva). They were compiled in various places, first in the Tamil country and in the northwest of India, then in the northern mountains of the Punjab, in the region of the Ganges (including Bengal), and finally in the center of the peninsula. Some of these texts include the Shatapatha Brahmana, the Shauka Brahmana, the Taittiriya Aranyaka, the Taittiriya Yajur Veda, the Taittiriya Samhita, the Brahmana Pitsara, the Brahmanda Purana, the Karma-Kanda Brahmana, the Brahmana-Upanishad, the Yajur-Veda-Brahmana-Upanishad, the Aranyaka-Upanishad, the Ashvini-Upanishad, the Brahnavidyā Upanishad, the Isha-Upanishad, the Purusha-Upanishad, the Taittiriya-Upanishad, the Kaushitaki-Upanishad, the Chandogya-Upanishad, the Brihadaranyaka-Upanishad, the Katha-Upanishad, the Taittiriya-Upanishad, the Visuddhi-Upanishad, the Prasna-Upanishad, the Para-Upanishad, the Aitareya-Upanishad, the Aitareya-Aranyaka-Upanishad, the Kaustiki-Upanishad, the Kaushitaki-Upanishad, the S
