A similar event to the Dakar Rally. DAKAR 18 consists of a series of three days of racing (25-28 December 2018), from Piriápolis to Bahía Blanca, in the provinces of Rio Grande do Sul and Buenos Aires, Argentina. The Dakar 18, part of the 2019 Dakar Rally, will be a mixed surface rally race, where all vehicles must be capable of navigating challenging terrain. The race will cover nearly 3,000 km on dirt roads and tracks, with sand dunes and mountains, as well as relatively smooth sections of asphalt. The race will consist of two stages. Each stage has three, twenty kilometre long, special stages and one seventy kilometre long marathon stage. The three-day Dakar 18 will be run in four regions across Argentina. The southern part of Argentina has a similar climate to that of the African deserts. History In 2013 the Argentina Government sent a request to the creator of the Dakar Rally to create a competitive car event in the country. It was a tough challenge to create a Dakar-like rally in Argentina, as the climate and terrain were completely different from the one in South Africa. The Argentinian government also wanted to create the same challenge as the Dakar, which is a dirt based rally that is very physically demanding. However, this was one of the most complex challenges, as the main Dakar Rally is now in its tenth edition and there were many factors to consider, including the size of the course, the amount of dirt tracks and various environmental conditions. Despite the request for a Dakar-like challenge, the Argentine government would like to take the event to a new level, with different cultures, unique scenery and more diverse routes, rather than just dirt and dust. The roads in the south of Argentina are very different from the ones in South Africa, which are covered with dirt. In fact, more than 75% of the tracks used for the Dakar Rally have been changed to have four and six lanes, whereas the roads in Argentina are mostly two-lane, with very narrow roads. There were various strategies and designs used in the Dakar to try to solve the problems created by the difficult terrain, but none had the same success as in the original Dakar Rally, as all of the routes are very different. The weather in Argentina is very different from South Africa, as there are many months of the year with warm temperatures and winter in the northern part of
