A psychometric analysis of a new scale assessing the perceived benefit of cosmetic surgery. Our study evaluated the reliability and validity of a new scale assessing the perceived benefit of cosmetic surgery. The scale consists of the core questions of a validated questionnaire addressing questions regarding the perceived benefits and disadvantages of cosmetic surgery. We conducted an exploratory and descriptive cross-sectional study. The participants were 157 women undergoing cosmetic surgery in a specialized center in Germany. A questionnaire was completed by the women in a face-to-face interview. Cronbach's alpha was 0.97 for perceived benefit and 0.93 for perceived disadvantages. The item-total correlation coefficient for the perceived benefit scale ranged from 0.44 to 0.74. The item-total correlation coefficient for the perceived disadvantage scale ranged from 0.54 to 0.73. The concurrent validity was high as the correlation between the perceived benefit and perceived disadvantage of cosmetic surgery was $r = 0.63$ (p < 0.001).
