The possible oestrogenic effect of damaging light was studied in cultures of preovulatory human granulosa cells. The cells were incubated either with the steroidogenic inhibitor actinomycin D or with the phosphodiesterase inhibitor (PDE) 3-isobutyl-1-methylxanthine (IBMX) or with both. Damage to the granulosa cells was induced by exposing the cultures to visible light. Thereafter, the cells were incubated with [3H]oestradiol-17 beta ([3H]E2), [3H]cortisol ([3H]F) and [3H]progesterone ([3H]P), and the tritiated steroids were measured in the culture medium by high-pressure liquid chromatography. The results were as follows: (1) Damage to granulosa cells resulted in a dose-dependent increase in [3H]E2 secretion; (2) damage also caused a rise in [3H]P secretion that was partly antagonized by IBMX; (3) IBMX had no effect on damage-induced [3H]E2 secretion but abolished the increase in [3H]F secretion; and (4) damage-induced [3H]E2 and [3H]F secretion were blocked in the presence of actinomycin D, whereas the increase in [3H]P secretion remained unaltered. It is concluded that damaging light suppresses the expression of P450scc and thus causes an increase in secreted E2; this increase is probably secondary to inhibition of steroid production in the steroidogenic granulosa cells.Snedden Snedden is a surname, and may refer to: Alan Snedden (footballer) (1936–2004), English footballer who played at left back Alan Snedden (footballer, born 1961), English footballer who played as a goalkeeper in the Football League Andy Snedden (born

It was built by IBM in the early 1990s to highlight IBM's latest technologies. It was in the heart of the tourist traffic of Lower Manhattan and a symbol of the city's 21st-century high-tech innovations. It was part of the much larger 'Big Apple II' that included the IBM World Trade Center/New York City (Bryant Park), IBM 360 Park (Madison Square Park) and IBM World Financial Center (Pennsylvania Plaza). The Tower The IBM Times Square Times Building was constructed as the main pavilion for the IBM Times Square and one of the most recognizable landmarks of the area. One of the four sides of the building had the IBM logo, and the opposite side had the facade of a modern Times Square building. Inside, the building had a "booth", where visitors could try out the latest technologies. It was protected by a glass, pedestrian-accessible wall, and a guard booth on the same side of the building that allowed visitors to view what was happening inside. The booth was designed by Daniel Libeskind. It had the lowest public underground parking in the world, more than $200 per month, although just fifteen minutes from ba244e880a
