"Coming from the Netherlands to America, the spirit in this painting is from the heart of Bruegel himself: he is the personification of what I think of as the 'modern spirit'. Intelligent and enlightened, a man who saw that there was more to life than the passing show of materialism and shallowness that was overtaking 'religion', 'science' and 'art'.". I have a four-storey townhouse, which has a somewhat odd layout. The easternmost basement, which is the first floor, is accessed via a stairwell directly below the access door. The remainder of the basement has another, western, door that is adjacent to the stairwell, but serves no real purpose other than to provide an emergency exit out to the access door. The laundry room with sink, washer, and dryer is here. The laundry room is on the main floor. The living room is on the second floor. This room is here. It has a door leading out to the above area. This, obviously, is the master bedroom. And thus far, that has been vacant. The third floor: There are two bedrooms (one with its own en-suite bathroom). The fourth floor: A living room (the only living room on the entire place). The problem is, in order to access the fourth floor, you have to walk over a basement door and then enter the attic from there. Thus, your only access to the attic is via the attic hatch, which is on the west side of the house. The attic hatch is made of plywood and I'm not even sure if it's an actual hatch. It definitely looks that way. The attic hatch at the northern corner of the 3ef4e8ef8d
