While I wasn't sure about the idea of having 15 separate widgets on the sidebar, the fact that it does what it says in the title was enough to convince me to buy the trial version, now I find out that I can use stock-specific notifications to track my portfolio very easily. Thanks Tim! First, it doesn't show a high or low indicator if you select 1 day. You need to set it to 1 week. Also, I don't see any price change notification whatsoever, as mentioned above. This turned into a pretty useless application for me. If you are actually able to enable alerts by prices, you need to be able to identify which symbol

I believe you can edit and then save the document. Your post would then appear as last. Please help me understand. Do you want me to make it then edit the document and save it? Chris, I can make it in 30 minutes, have it all done and posted. I believe you can edit and then save the document. Your post would then appear as last. Please help me understand. Do you want me to make it then edit the document and save it? Rob Chris, Rob I have uploaded the above in so it is in the download section. I am not sure if you have a link to what you are talking about, or if it would be best to have Chris post a link. Chris Rob, No, I uploaded the spreadsheet. If you want it, you can download it. If you mean that I have put stock meter as one of your downloads, then yes, it is. Also, in your spreadsheet, are you suggesting that I should go to the downloads page then down to stock meter, then the CSV file, then the importation tab to get the data into Excel? It makes little sense to me. Chris Rob, Chris Sorry, I don't make the rules, if a procedure makes sense to me, then I will do it. You uploaded the stock meter spreadsheet. That makes sense to me, as I wanted it for my website. And I uploaded the CSV file, which contains 6a5afadab4c
