Lauterblog is the online version of Frank Lauter's music career blog, which he started in 2004. His first show was at the WMC Music Conference in Miami in March 2000, when he was working at VH1 as a music supervisor. Lauter currently lives in the Charleston, SC area, where he co-founded, and is the musical director of, the Charleston Soul Orchestra. References

The NRA's campaign to make guns simpler for easy-to-carry pocket pistols is one of its best-funded and most effective, but critics have said it is in reality a way for the NRA to sell more guns. Companies such as Colt and Ruger have heavily advertised on the association's website and at several recent national conferences. Now, however, the American Civil Liberties Union has filed suit on behalf of five gun safety groups to halt the NRA's "Don't Sweat It" campaign. The suit, which was filed on Monday in a federal district court in Colorado, argues that the campaign encourages the purchase of easily concealed and dangerous guns. “These types of guns are not a good fit for home defense because they do not serve that role adequately,” said Jay Wachtel, the senior staff attorney for the National Network to End Domestic Violence, which is a plaintiff in the suit. “They’re better suited to being carried in a waistband or a purse.” Last year, the National Shooting Sports Foundation, the NRA’s gun manufacturers’ trade group, began its “Don’t Sweat It” campaign, a Twitter hashtag under which many tweets are posted that urge people to buy guns. The campaign is aimed at the “privileged few” who, the NRA says, do not need to worry about concealed carry laws. This is untrue, the suit says.

The suit says the NRA’s Twitter campaign is not entirely false: the campaign’s most recent post urges people to carry their guns across state
