The curve will then be integrated to create a smooth curve between the nodes of the basis. I can create an interpolant function and simply integrate it with scipy.integrate.quad. However, the curve generated looks much more jagged than it should. I tried generating the nodes of the basis separately and setting those as starting and ending points for the curve. In that case, the curve is more smooth, but is still still not as smooth as the curve generated by scipy.integrate.quad. Are there other approaches to this problem that I should consider using? Here is an example of what I am referring to. #For a function f(x) defined as f(x) = 3*x+3, show the effect of #setting various b-spline nodes of the form y=a*x*x+b*x on the area #under the curve, where x=f(x). X=linspace(0,3,100); F=f(X); [N, M] = size(X); #Create b-spline basis using Matlab's bspline function. b = bspline(X,M); #Now estimate the area under the curve under the plot using #scipy's `integrate`: A = integrate(F,0,3) #Now we plot: figure(1); hold on; plot(X,F,'b');

System Requirements For Kundli:

Introduction While Episode 9 still isn't available in most regions, that doesn't mean it's time to go back to live action reviews. Instead, I'm going to take a look at some more 4K content, this time in the form of UHD Blu-ray releases. We'll also be looking at some older titles, some that have been available for quite a while but remain relevant due to their high technical content. As always, I'll do my best to be objective and spoiler-free. When
