The program works at the system level and has no impact on your activities that is why there are no known issues with this product. WEBNoTrack is able to intercept, manipulate and permanently delete tracking cookies using 3 different methods, namely: - Intercept cookies - Whitelist domains - Whitelist pages To begin with, make sure you disable the Ask permission dialog when browsing the web using other than Chrome, Edge, Firefox or Internet Explorer. You can change this setting in the browser settings as well as by rebooting the system. The utility has a configuration panel that displays a list of all the pages visited by you as well as the settings of the ads that you find intrusive. To start the monitoring process, you can make a smart choice and specify the domains to include in the whitelist. A popup window will be displayed to confirm whether you want to include those websites in the list. During your browsing session, the tool will run every time you close your browser, change tabs or open a new one. Unless you decide to reset all tracked information, the cookie modifications will remain in place. Whenever you experience an issue when using the browser, then make sure you have the latest version of the product installed. WEBNoTrack

WEBNoTrack is a tool dedicated to intercept, alter and delete tracking cookies that are grabbing data about your browsing habits without your consent. Works quietly as a Windows service in the background Following a straightforward setup, you are welcomed by a rugged and minimalistic interface that displays a handful of options, namely starting, stopping, disabling and restarting the protection service. In case the service is not running when launched, then a potential solution is to make sure you open it with administrator rights. The program works with popular browsers that operate smoothly on the newest versions of Windows, meaning Chrome, Firefox, Internet Explorer, Edge as well as the Flash Player that is integrated into the latter two. The idea for the app is to run as a Windows service and monitor cookies at the system level. Blacklist or whitelist frequently accessed domains Considering that obfuscating the domain name is a common practice among advertisement agents, it is easy to understand how you can get tricked to click links that include tracking agents. Nevertheless, since not there are situations when you want sites to keep your preferences, the app enables you to classify domains accordingly. More precisely, you can include the sites that you commonly visit in the whitelist, so that the cookies belonging to that domain are not inspected or changed. Generally speaking, this is preferable for social media or banking sites where you want to preserve login information or preferences. It goes without saying that if you blacklist a domain, all cookies generated are changed or deleted in real time to prevent any tracking. The greylist domains work similarly as the whitelisted wit the difference that tracking information is destroyed once you exit the browser.
