A: Would recommend trying the simple while loop example from here: Eg: $testArr=array(); while($row = mysqli_fetch_array($query)){ $testArr[]=$row; } print_r($testArr); A: You could simply do: $rows = array(); while($row = $result->fetch_assoc()) { $rows[] = $row; } // array $rows['mykey'] = 'values'; // or whatever This is perhaps safer if you don't know what keys are available. If the "Wins" column contains an asterisk (), the win was not due to a title. If the "Wins" column contains two asterisks, the win was by a disqualification. If the "Wins" column does not contain an asterisk, the win was either by a points decision (for contests not involving a title) or a decision by the referee, or was a technical decision. defunct tournaments For head-to-head matchups involving defunct tournaments, the matchup results are shown in this section. If the defunct tournaments had not been active for many years, the results for those tournaments may only be partly accurate. if the "Wins" column contains an asterisk (), the win was not due to a title. Related Tags: (CBS SF) – A new survey of 400 healthy American adults has found that, on average, people who drink eight glasses of water each day — as the U.S. Department of Agriculture recommends — have 6.25 percent lower blood pressure than those who drink only 3 to 6 glasses. The study, released by the University of Tennessee at Chattanooga, also found that the more sodium people consumed, the higher their blood pressure. “If you think about the dietary guidelines for sodium, the dietary guidelines for water, the guidelines for alcohol, it’s really that simple,” said lead author William Pruden, a doctoral student of nutrition and dietetics at the University of Tennessee at Chattanooga. “If you follow the 3/8ths of the dietary guidelines — three servings of whole grains, eight servings of fruits and vegetables and eight cups (2.2 liters) of water a day — you get all of the benefits that the guidelines have for reducing blood pressure.” The study tested adults in the Chattanooga area between the ages of 18 and 65 for a variety of measurements and other factors. The researchers included weight, lifestyle habits, exercise and sodium consumption. The participants were also asked about their dietary intake, including the number of glasses they consumed each day. The participants provided information on their dietary intake on the days before the blood pressure and other study assessments took place. The findings are reported in the online version of the journal Hypertension. For the blood pressure study, the authors conducted blood pressure measurements in three settings, including while the participants were seated for two hours, standing for four hours and resting for six hours. Health experts note that a person may need to change their lifestyle, including diet and physical activity, to lower their blood pressure. In a statement issued with the study, Dr. Kent

Berridge, director of the USDA's human nutrition program in Washington, said the results show that "adults can live healthier lives by following three simple, non-nutritional dietary guidelines: 2.5 servings of whole grains a day; six or more cups of water a day; and two to three servings of low-fat and high-fiber fruits and vegetables a day." "This research helps confirm what many doctors have long known — that if we eat a healthy diet, then we're healthier," Berridge said. "People should be 3da54e8ca3
