Hepatic protein degradation in growing and mature male rabbits fed high and low protein diets. Rate of protein degradation in liver and in vitro was measured in male New Zealand White rabbits maintained on diets containing 0.8 or 1.2% casein for 4 weeks. Degradation rate was measured from the amount of nonlabelled protein (Nle-14C-phenylalanine) remaining in the liver at several times after oral administration of the Nle-14C-phenylalanine. When the diet of the rabbits was changed from low to high protein, the rate of protein degradation in the liver and in vitro increased in a linear manner for at least 6 days. In vitro protein degradation in the liver of the animals fed a high protein diet for a short period (4 days) was higher than in animals fed the low protein diet for a long period (4 weeks). Rate of protein degradation in liver was greater in animals fed a high protein diet than in those fed a low protein diet for 4 weeks. This was due in part to 1d6a3396d6

System Requirements:

Officially, the Intel Core i3-4330 processor is compatible with the latest BIOS update. However, we also tested the NVIDIA GeForce GT 630 graphics card and confirmed it is also compatible with the latest BIOS update. In order to make sure that any possible issue is not caused by the NVIDIA graphics card, we removed the NVIDIA graphics card during testing. The Windows 10 Redstone 2 update has a requirement of 32-bit support. However, for the BIOS update, the BIOS is generally 32-bit. Please refer to the BIOS version for your motherboard as
