To assess the role of estrogen-receptor (ER) genotype in mortality from all causes and to determine whether different ER genotypes have differential risks for mortality associated with obesity in postmenopausal women enrolled in a large, randomized clinical trial. We identified genotypes at two polymorphisms of the ER alpha gene (rs2234693 and rs9340799), genotypes at one polymorphism of the ER beta gene (rs2077647), and genotypes at three SNPs of the GH receptor gene (rs370669, rs4774560, and rs6966605). We used Cox proportional hazards models to estimate mortality risks associated with obesity according to genotype. Women in the Clinical Trial of Ovarian Energy and Oral Contraceptives (CTO) had genotyped data for a large proportion of all the study participants (N=8,847). Obesity was associated with increased all-cause mortality (hazard ratio [HR] for morbid obesity, 2.32; 95% CI, 1.54-3.51) and higher risks for mortality from cancer (HR for morbid obesity, 2.81; 95% CI, 1.66-4.74) and cardiovascular disease (HR for morbid obesity, 1.91; 95% CI, 1.11-3.31). The increased mortality risk associated with obesity did not vary significantly according to the ER genotypes studied. The HR for obesity-related mortality was comparable for women with the X chromosome or autosome genotypes. Obesity is associated with increased mortality from all causes in postmenopausal women. The ER genotypes studied were not associated with mortality risk in relation to obesity.Improvements in speech and language development following early identification and treatment of hearing loss. Children with cochlear implants have a more rapid language development than those who have hearing loss diagnosed in early childhood. In this study, the acquisition of speech in normally hearing children, diagnosed with sensorineural hearing loss, was analyzed. Seventy-two children with hearing loss and 74 hearing control children 3da54e8ca3
