Pathological prognostic factors in oral squamous cell carcinoma: a study of 307 cases. The correlation between tumor pathological features and clinical prognosis was evaluated in 307 cases of oral squamous cell carcinoma. The cases included 201 males and 106 females with a mean age of 59 years (range 31-85 years). The index case of this study occurred in the middle and lower jaw only, and in 68.7% of cases tumors were restricted to the tongue. The disease stage distribution was as follows: stage I = 37.1% (112/307); stage II = 30.9% (97/307); stage III = 30.9% (97/307), and stage IV = 9.5% (29/307). The 5-year overall survival and disease-free survival rates were 49.8% and 33.1%, respectively, for all patients. There were significant differences in 5-year survival rates among stages: stage I, 54.9%; stage II, 39.0%; stage III, 28.1%; and stage IV, 0. The 5-year survival rates were 77.0%, 45.2%, 24.0%, and 0%, respectively, for patients with T1-2, T3-4, N0-1, and N2-3 tumors. The 5-year survival rates were 74.1%, 42.6%, 30.6%, and 6.6%, respectively, for patients with high and low pathological grades. The data indicated that each parameter was independent prognostic factors for oral squamous cell carcinoma. In addition, a significant correlation was observed between grade, stage and the presence of cervical metastases. Whatever it was going to be, was it going to be good? An answer was needed by mid-summer of 2002, which is when the architectural team presented its plans to owner Edwin R. Lhotka. I'll give you a few minutes to read this up, and we can talk about your new hotel after this. Oh, and I wanted to let you know that I
