Pre Rewriting is the key step to success

At this step, you are going to make plans for your complete essay. Firstly decide whether you will favor the topic or will be against it.

Then decide to whom you are presenting your stance. Keep in mind the perspective of your audience. Have a thorough research of the topic and collect ample evidence to support your arguments. Select the powerful convincing events and choose your opponent's viewpoint also to make your points solid.

Outlining the content

To have a logical structure throughout your paper you need to plan it earlier and work on an outline. The outline is a good way to organize the structure before writing the essay. By making outlines you can easily pinpoint the main ideas and can organize them properly.

The Outline can be changed during the writing process. Include an introduction, your thesis, body paragraphs containing topic sentences, and a concluding paragraph in the essay outline. Use bullets for each point.

Make a rough draft

After working on the outline, you can start writing the first draft of your essay. While writing, take care to include the thesis statement in the introduction and start your essay with a hook. The hook can be fact, question, or anecdote. Your stance should be clear in the thesis statement.

Present each point in the body paragraph with a clear topic sentence. Defend the topic with evidence from quotes, statistics, and examples. Still, confused? Or want to take help from someone? The answer to who can write my paper for me is a writing agency working online.

Revise and redraft

A good way to notch an essay is to revise it after writing the first draft. Review it and modify it for any changes. Your essay will be best when you use relevant examples and evidence. You used a hook at the start of the essay, and every paragraph contains a topic sentence and supporting evidence.

Have you cited opponents' views/ is the ending abrupt or the conclusion is well organized. Check all these points and if there are any missing you can add them.
