Q: Mapping an entire list in React/GraphQL I have a list like this: `map = [{ name: "Person 1", phone: "12345" }, { name: "Person 2", phone: "123456" }, { name: "Person 3", phone: "1234567" }]` I want to map it to a GraphQL query that returns data from just the latest version of the list, so I can use the latest data from the DB. If I ask for the data this way: `{allPersons(orderBy: "createdAt") { edges { node { phone } } } }` I get an error because it doesn't know about Person 1 and 2. A: You can query a list of nodes using an array of id's, and filter by query: `query { people (where: { id: [1,2] }) { ... } }` If you are using ApolloClient, you can get an array of fetched node by invoking the query: `async query ({ client, props }) { const ids = [1, 2]; return await client.query({ query: PEOPLE_QUERY, variables: { id: { in: ids }, }, }); }` The above code returns an object like this: `{ data: { people: [{ id: 1, phone: "12345",` me, Marc Davis It was a lot of fun talking with that rich whirlpool of Australian artistry, Marc Davis, for the December issue of What Art?, who agreed to answer our questions on a wide range of topics in a huge volume of words. The following is only a selection, but the full interview with David Blount, Tim Crouch, Dennis Shackley, Marc Davis, Peter Lloyd and more appears in the issue. Where did you first encounter the work of M. C. Escher? On the first day of art school. Half an hour before we were due to meet the art teacher I went to fetch my materials and when I returned, and called the art teacher's name, there was no response. I looked around and all I could see was the back of the room and the door that led out to the fire escape. But I had not been there a moment earlier, so I began to wonder what I might have missed. I was still standing there quivering with possibility when I heard, “As you know all, Professor, the term begins next week,” and a small movement in the wall near the d0c515b9f4
