The aim of the study was to examine the processes of development of primary biliary cirrhosis in patients with hepatitis C virus infection (HCV) and the course of chronic infection and correlation with the existence of lesions in the marginal portion of the liver and effect of combined therapy on the course of the primary biliary cirrhosis (PBC). Clinical and biochemical study included 58 patients with the history of chronic HCV infection, confirmed by detection of viral RNA in the serum. Primary biliary cirrhosis was diagnosed in 35 patients (Group I) and the remaining 23 patients (Group II) did not have clinical and biochemical signs of PBC. The patients were grouped into 4 clinical and laboratory subgroups: group 1 - healed type (24 patients), groups 2 - ill-healed type (9 patients), 3 - ill-healed and deteriorated type (7 patients), and group 4 - progressed type (
