Check out Adobe's technical website for tips and tricks on how to use Photoshop. Before You Begin Download Photoshop for the PC by clicking on this link. Photoshop CS5 for Windows is a multilingual version of the program. Photoshop CS5 is usually free, but there are currently on-sale coupons available if you subscribe. Before you begin, there are some things that you should do to make sure that your photos are in good shape: Adjust White Balance If the colors of your images are to remain accurate and natural, it's imperative that you adjust the white balance settings of your camera before beginning to work with Photoshop. This step is recommended for both digital cameras and DSLRs. It also makes a significant difference to your images when you do develop them later on. If you don't adjust your images' white balance settings, the colors may shift in your photos and cause many of your edits to look unnatural. To make your images look more natural when you develop them later, either in Photoshop or your favorite editing program, increase the amount of warm light in the image and decrease the amount of cool light that is in the image. NOTE: If you shoot a lot of images with the same white balance settings on your camera, you can make all of your images look the same by saving all of your images as a group in the camera's memory and then adjusting the white balance in your camera and clicking on the "Paste as New" button in the camera's menu. Recompose Photos Often times, photos that were taken with the intention of one subject will turn out with a composition of other objects and people. Take the time to recompose the subject(s) in the image. Removing People or Objects from the Photo If you know that a photo contains people or objects that are either in the wrong position or not in the center of the frame, you can correct the problem by cropping the edges of the photo. A cropping tool is found on the flyout menu of the Photoshop toolbox. Many cameras provide a cropping function built-in. When you use the tool, you can select from a variety of different shapes to crop an image. TIP: If you select a shape that is too large, you will most likely lose some or all of your original image when you crop. If you select a smaller than ideal shape, you may lose some image data.

1. Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a semiconductor device, and a method of manufacturing the same, and more particularly, to a semiconductor device having a cell-array structure and a method of manufacturing the same. 2. Description of the Prior Art In recent years, the application of semiconductor devices in various electronic products is developing toward the miniaturization, thinning, and large capacity. As such, demands on the formation of semiconductor devices are directed to develop an ultra thin semiconductor device, such as a semiconductor device having a cell array structure. FIG. 1 illustrates a partial cross-sectional view of a conventional semiconductor device. Referring to FIG. 1, a conventional semiconductor device 100 comprises a substrate 110, a cell-array structure 120, and a gate dielectric layer 130. The substrate 110 comprises a metal silicide layer 112, an insulating layer 114, and a substrate metal layer 116 formed on the substrate 110. The cell-array structure 120 comprises a gate structure 122, a source region 124, a drain region 126, a trench 128, and a dielectric layer 130. The gate structure 122 comprises a gate dielectric layer 132 and a gate electrode layer 134 that are formed on the cell-array structure 120. The source region 124 and the drain region 126 are embedded in the substrate 110. The trench 128 is formed in the substrate 110. The dielectric layer 130 is formed to cover the cell-array structure 120 and the gate structure 122. However, the conventional semiconductor device 100 does not utilize a substrate metal layer which is formed at the bottom of the substrate to form a metal silicide layer. Consequently, there is still a need for providing a semiconductor device having a cell-array structure capable of preventing a source/drain metal layer from penetrating the dielectric layer and being partially etched to have a plug structure.
