The first thing to focus on is how long your document will go on. Is it going to take up more than one page? If so, you have to make sure it has a title at the top somewhere.

Nowadays if a title isn't on the top of a page, it doesn't exist. It's as simple as that. You're not expected to put something like 'Untitled' either or even leave it blank - this will just annoy your reader who is going to spend time trying to find out what you've written about and will likely throw your work in the bin if they can't figure out what's going on after a few minutes.

The first thing you have to do is come up with a proper plan for what you're going to write my essay about; the desired end result. Once you know what it is you want to do, the rest will be much easier.

If you've done your research properly and it's all in front of you on paper, then formatting an essay should be quite simple but you can also take help from paper writing service. It's just a case of putting everything in the right order, using correct spelling and grammar as well as ensuring that everything is clear and easy for people to read (something I'm sure we can all agree should be at the top of our lists).

Any piece of writing should have its importance and relevance clearly displayed at the outset for everyone to see. If you are an online essay writing service and you are an essay that is supposed to be funny then there is no point putting in lots of references at the front because all people interested in reading it will do so by now already know that it's some kind of essay and they aren't expecting references at the start.

Writing an essay can be surprisingly easy if you format it properly; a little planning is all that's necessary in most cases:

- 1) Firstly, make sure you put your working title on top as this will set out your expectations for everyone before they even read the first word.
- 2) Then, to keep them interested (especially if you're writing something technical), there must be something that catches their eye immediately which leads on into where your work is going to go next. Make use of graphics and photographs here - people may just skim through everything quickly but these two things are guaranteed to get their attention and so it'll ensure that readers see what they should see very quickly.
- 3) It's then best to go into any of the background information that you've gathered but don't make it too long or you'll lose your readers. Keep it short and sweet for the reader's benefit.
- 4) If this piece is split into sections, list these at the end so they're easy to find when people are looking for them.
- 5) Make sure your references are structured in a viewable format (if lots of numbers are involved, try and explain what everything means to ensure that readers will understand you quickly). Images should be numbered according to where they appear in the document; if numbering starts on page one, make sure it ends on page one too so it's not confusing for people.
