the.Q: How to change the height of a element in a flexbox based on the height of other parent elements? I'm trying to learn flexbox and I'm stuck on how to achieve the following: There's a parent container, which has 2 child elements. The parent container is a fixed size and it needs to take the height of its children, but it also needs to be flexible, in the sense that if one or more child elements is shorter than the rest, the parent container has to grow to accommodate that.

Here is a demo: I was going to use percentages for the flexbox, but as you can see in the above example, the container does not grow as expected. I have searched a lot and haven't found a solution for this particular problem. A: If I understand your question correctly, you are asking for a way to use flexbox to grow and shrink a div based on what children are added. This is not possible with a div where you will have to use a wrapper div. To achieve this in a flexbox, create a row layout where you put a wrapping div on top of your 2 child divs. The wrapping div will have a flex-grow of 1 and it will grow or shrink to match the available room on the bottom. Here is an example of this using an image as your child divs: HTML:

CSS: div { width: 300px; height: 300px; display: flex; flex-flow: row; border: 1px solid red; padding: 10px; } div div { height: 30px; width: 200px; } div div img { height: 200
